I just reworked some stories using xcode 4.3.1. I used to use older versions of xcode and everything worked fine. Now I am a bit confused as to whether xcode 4.3.1 generates storyboard files with unique ids, and thus when I change the files they overwrite, or whether the id's are reused? A: Xcode 4.3.1 appends a unique ID to the storyboard file (see Build Settings). They are probably reusing them. Since the day House Republicans walked into the Capitol, they have tried to prove that President Barack Obama is so afraid of them, and the voters who elected them, that he will "do anything" to avoid their agenda. That's been their line on so many fronts, from health care to raising the debt ceiling, that it would be hard to rebut. So far, it's all been a bunch of bluff. In the case of the debt ceiling, the House Republicans finally caved and raised it last night, but they still think they have leverage. And today they will put it to use. The House is going to vote this afternoon on an "omnibus" bill that will provide funding for the rest of this fiscal year, and fund the government through mid-March. But there's a catch. It will also include an amendment from Rep. Mick Mulvaney, R-S.C 2d92ce491b
