And lately, my life has been a bit more chaotic than usual. My fiancé and I have both been ill, we have moved apartments, and a ton of family has been in town. With no shortage of chaos, we finally figured out a solution to our predicament. We are leaving the city and moving to North Carolina, where we will be under the care of family and be near my fiancé's grandparents. We're hoping to spend a year or more there, and I'm excited about what the future holds. But before we pack up, we're going to be making some changes. It's not something we want to change for our own lives, but a lot of things need to happen before we're able to move to our new home, so we need to pack up some stuff. We're going to be downsizing our residence, and moving to a smaller house. I'm excited to do this, but I'm also having a hard time doing this. Moving so soon after my wedding is a lot to be doing, but we both have a lot on our plates, so we made the decision to start our new life in a place where our schedule is more relaxed. The plan is to have the biggest move we've done so far - moving into a new apartment, leaving behind almost all of our furniture and old belongings, and hopefully starting fresh again. With any luck, we'll also have time to acclimate to the 2d92cc491b
