Tristionellina (Testate amoebae) is a genus of testate amoebae that includes the Heteroplidae. They are marine, with some species living in freshwater environments. They are euryamoebae, that is, the feeding cysts are rather small, less than 4mm in diameter. Species in this genus are characterized by their small size, their nearly spherical body (five to eight times as large as the cell itself), their quite short branchial plates, their minute feeding lagenidia and by the absence of submedial lobules in the pseudostratiform cells (Hofeneder, 1967). The size of the lagenidia relative to their cell sizes range from under 10% in the large species to over 40% in the smaller species. Well documented species include: T. borealis (Börger in Mathis, 1913): This species (unlike most species in this genus) do not have a medullary sheath. T. cultellata Renard, 1937: In Puzderov et al. (2011), this species is described as a new genus and species, the first in the Heteroplidae. T. gelatinosipes (Winckworth in Mathis, 1913): Renard (1937) showed that this species is not a member of Heteroplidae. It is apparently allied to Gromia. T. lienisana (Renard, 1937): The first specimens of this species (from Spain, France, and Portugal) were collected in dolomitic limestone. T. lienisana is characterized by an unshielded cyst with long and thin branchial plates (≥ 3 times the length of the l

Efficacy of all-ceramic crowns in primary molars. All-ceramic restorations are widely used in posterior primary molars but studies assessing their performance in comparison to conventional amalgam and composite cores are scarce. To compare survival rates of all-ceramic crowns with those of amalgam and composite all-ceramic crowns in primary molars. Of the first 120 all-ceramic crowns produced at the University Hospital, Amsteden, Rotterdam, 110 crowns were treated with palladium silicate. Of these, 74 crowns were used in primary molars and 36 in permanent teeth. A comparison was made between the primary and the permanent molar categories. For permanent molars, all-ceramic crowns were compared with amalgam and composite cores. All-ceramic crowns in primary molars were as successful as in permanent molars. The survival rate was 96.6% after 36 months. There was no difference in the survival of crowns between permanent and primary molars. The success rate of all-ceramic crowns in primary molars and in permanent molars is comparable. All-ceramic crowns in primary molars are a valid treatment alternative for restoring carious primary molars.

Tax avoidance is a big problem, but what is it? Are you being pushed into tax evasion? We've been seeing a lot of headlines about avoidance - big companies claiming too much tax relief, or setting up complex schemes to shift their profits overseas. But there's another form of avoidance - tax evasion. And for the first time there's a body specifically set up to tackle it. The HMRC body is called Contact. Why do people like to make their money via dodgy tax schemes? Here are some of the motivations behind tax avoidance - and why people may be tempted to think that avoidance is a perfectly acceptable way of making money.

1. Avoid the taxman It's no secret that the taxman is after you and anyone else who earns money in the UK. Over the years, the amount of money collected by the government has risen sharply. But at the same time, people have become more aware of the taxman. If people are aware that the government 3ef4e8ef8d
