After battling some injury woes throughout his time at Indiana University, the 20-year-old was finally able to secure a spot in the Cubs organization as the 16th overall pick in this year’s draft. Although he has yet to get on the mound and show what he’s made of on the baseball diamond, scouts are feeling optimistic after his first workout. In a short workout that lasted just a little over an hour, Schwarber was able to reach 100 pitches in the first inning and stayed in the field for all three innings. He didn’t allow any home runs in the short workout, and reached his fastball in the 93rd percentile and his slider in the 71st. After the workout, the Chicago Cubs tweeted a shot of the workout, and it received rave reviews from the mainstream media. One major source of concern for Schwarber’s future with the team is a back injury. Although it is unclear how serious the injury is, if it’s serious, Schwarber could be forced to miss his entire rookie season. Kyle Schwarber going through his first workout for the Cubs.
