Syphilis is caused by a sexually transmitted disease (STD) and it is an infection with the spirochete bacterium, Treponema pallidum. The bacterium is transmitted by a variety of routes. The classic route of infection is through sexual contact, especially vaginal or anal. The disease can also be transmitted by contact with infected body fluids, including blood, mouth, and urine. Symptoms of syphilis usually begin 3 to 6 weeks after infection. In men, signs and symptoms include: red, itchy bumps that turn into sores; fever; dark and itchy sores that may turn into painful ulcers; swollen lymph nodes; and pain and swelling in the bones. In women, symptoms usually appear as: a painless, hard lump on the cervix; a painless, swollen sore on the vagina; small, reddish-brown sores on the lower gums or inside the mouth; fever; and swollen glands. How to diagnose? The gold standard for diagnosis of syphilis is through a blood test called 2d92ce491b
