AutoCAD is designed for professionals who design and draft in 2D or 3D, or who do both. AutoCAD can also be used for architectural and engineering applications. The product can be used for 2D drafting, 2D, and 3D rendering. It can also create and modify construction drawings in the 2D Drafting or 3D Modeling mode. It can also import and edit data from other CAD programs and from GIS (Geographic Information Systems) software. The design tools in AutoCAD are organized into several toolbars. The main work area of the program includes the Schematic (or 2D) and Drafting toolbars. The Schematic toolbar contains tools for drawing lines, arcs, circles, and rectangles. The Drafting toolbar contains tools for drawing polylines, polycurves, surfaces, surfaces, solids, arrows, text, and other features. As an Autodesk product, AutoCAD has an extensive online user community, extensive training materials and help and also hundreds of free and premium tools and templates. In addition, the application's main source of new software is Autodesk's free online downloadable tools and templates. Altered Expression of Kallikreins in the Prostate. The identification of biomarkers to improve the diagnosis and management of prostate cancer (PCa) has been a continuing goal of molecular oncology research. In addition to the identification of genes frequently mutated in PCa, recent studies have suggested that the expression of proteolytic enzymes that activate growth factors, cytokines, and other growth mediators may also be altered in this disease. These include kallikreins, a family of secreted serine proteases that may contribute to the etiology of prostate disorders. The goal of this study was to evaluate the expression levels of all 10 human kallikreins in prostatic tissues with or without PCa. The authors used a TaqMan Low-Density Array to evaluate the expression of kallikreins in 32 benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH) tissues and 44 PCa tissues. Real-time PCR data was normalized to the housekeeping gene, 18S, and expressed as fold change compared to the benign prostate controls. As a secondary goal, the expression of kallikreins in three widely used prostate cancer cell lines, PC-3, DU-145, and LNCaP, was evaluated. The results showed that five kallikreins were significantly altered in PCa compared to benign tissues. The highest level of differential expression was found for KAL-1, a secreted proteinase that activates transforming growth factor- β . These findings support the possibility of the use of kallikreins as biomarkers for prostate cancer.
