Microsoft Windows Client Access service is a component that enables you to manage client PCs running on your network. With this service, you can provide your users with remote access to your systems. You can also monitor how users use their computers and can take action if they do not follow your company's policies. This software is very useful when working from home or on the road. For example, if your company has an intranet, you can create one for your employees. You can keep them up to date with the latest information, and even provide them with access to all the tools and resources you have available. With this service, you can also create a network that enables your users to access your company's computers from other devices, such as mobile phones, notebooks, and laptops. This component provides services to your users' computers. You can use these services to remotely manage your users' computers. For example, you can use them to monitor how your users are using their computers, and you can restrict or even prevent users from using certain programs. Although the technical details of Client Access Server are provided, the following topics are only some of the ways that this service can be used:

- Remote access (including Network Access)
- Remote sessions

I'm working with some of this data from a.csv file. The data looks like: What I'm looking to do is make each group of the same ID have its own column. So I'm trying to use PROC SGPLOT and add a new variable to contain a numeric value (I know I can do this with the 'varname' method). I need the first two columns to be the same for each ID and the new value to be placed in the next column. For example: A: Your data and question are incomplete, so I am not sure what is your target. If you only want to concatenate new variable you can use `sprintf()` function. If you want to aggregate data for each ID, you can try below code. `data want ; set have ; by id; new_var = substr(year,1,4) || '-' || substr(month,1,2) || '-' || substr(day,1,2); run;` Or if you want to concatenate variable per group, you can use the following code. `data want ; set have ; by id; new_var = substr(year,1,4) || '-' || substr(month,1,2) || '-' || substr(day,1,2) || new_var; run;` Q: The page you requested was not found when using routing with ASP.NET MVC? I have a MainPage view that is strongly typed to a ViewModel. The view is nested inside an area that is strongly typed to a controller. When I hit the MainPage view I get the error "The page you requested was not found"
