DEVONCERPTION is a fast and easy process that can extract software and other data from a Windows computer so that you can have it on a USB drive (like an external hard drive). It works like an automatic backup: just plug in the USB drive, and you'll have the same software and data on your new drive as you had on your old computer. The script allows you to mount the hard drive, choose the files/folders you want to back up, and gives you all the information about your PC including the version, name and version of your operating system, memory, processor, number of free and used hard drives, and how much space is used on each drive. The script extracts it to a folder on the USB drive. You can also choose to extract to a directory on the computer hard drive. It's only a text file, and it won't affect or damage anything on your computer. Example: – just choose your hard drive and click “select all files” to get a list of everything in the computer. “It's the ultimate solution to the problem of not being able to back-up your music library or videos to a portable device.” – Justin Wagoner – Windows Laptop Magazine

Need to remove deleted files, folders and partitions from hard disk, or recover accidentally deleted items from Windows Recycle Bin? Here, I will briefly describe the most recommended ways to restore missing files, partitions, or recover a corrupted partition table. The hard disk of almost all the PCs in our daily life are partitioned in order to separate the main system files, data files, or even to separate the operating system. The bootable operating system (OS) such as Windows 7 and Windows 8 is also stored on a separate partition on a hard disk in order to avoid that it gets corrupted due to improper shutdown, hardware failure, virus attack, etc. To create a bootable OS you need to make the drive partitions bootable. These partition types are separated by the operating system from the main system partition. The operating system makes a list of partition types in the order that they are to be activated by assigning the boot code when the computer is powered on. Therefore, in case of a system failure, you need to be able to recover the partition table and the entire partitioning system for starting up the computer using the appropriate Windows bootable OS. If you don't have the partitions in order of bootable operating system, it won't function properly. Recover lost partition table Recovering a partition table will help you restore partitions as if they were intact and functional. To do this, you need to be able to recover the partition table that was lost after the PC system failure. These types of partition tables or partition information are located on the Master Boot Record (MBR) of the hard disk. If you try to access the main system partition, you will get a message that the system is corrupted or you can't reach it. Similarly, if you try to access the Windows 7 or Windows 8 partition, you will notice that it doesn't appear on the list of the operating systems available on the computer. Therefore, you can use one of the software tools that are designed to
