Bashar al-Asad, the current President of Syria, is a product of the Baath movement. If the Baath movement is the youth movement of the pro-Asad families, the Bashar al-Assad will be the product of this movement. Hence the Bashar al-Assad may be found in the dictatorship, as a leader, who represents the interests of the movement, and we must find Bashar al-Assad under the banner of the Baath movement. Bashar al-Asad grew up in Damascus in the 1970s. He spent his teens and early twenties in the same idyllic Damascus suburb where his family had been living since the mid 1960s. He moved back to the capital at age 21, after inheriting his fathers political career. After leading Iraqs Baath party to a stunning 1979 election victory, he was anointed president the next year. Most western observers of Bashar al-Asad have classified him as a leader with some charisma and an anodyne style, who harnessed his relationship with his father, Hafez al-Assad, to his own ends. 's introduction of the Alawite doctrine as a way of cementing his rule in Syria and cementing his power at the top of the Syrian party has enabled him to remain in power despite the fact that he has become progressively more isolated from the rest of the party and the Alawite community. Alawites are the predominant fraction in Syria, but they are also the minority within the military and the polity. Bashar al-Asad signed an Alawite constitution which makes him the leader of Alawites. Assad is one of the top leaders in the Baath party. Syria may not have a constitution of its own, but rather, the bashar core beliefs pdf free wholesale disenfranchisement of some of the important political players.

public discourse of the leader of the regime under bashar al-assad represents what has come to be known as the syrian national dialogue quartet (snd), which consists of the syrian high negotiations committee (hnc), the syrian national coalition (snc), syrian opposition and activists in “conciliatory” (darwish, 2012; harfoush, 2013) and “reconciliatory” approaches (el khouri, 2008; abou zeid, 2014). the narrative of his discourse promises change, stability and security. [32] bashar al-assad describes the change and stability of a secular society in the syrian state, insisting on the need for national dialogue as a way to build trust between the sides and to resolve all disagreements. [32] an examination of the main slogans and discourse strategies of bashar al-assad during the period of 2011-2014, shows the widespread discourse of the regime under bashar al-assad, reflecting the main characteristics of the syrian state, which implies that it assumes the role of a benevolent father, a protector of the stability and stability of the nation, a guarantor of the achievement of rights, in addition to the legitimacy he acquired through the last constitutional agreement. [32] this view of bashar and his regime is not a new interpretation to the evidence of state governance, as the regime has never denied or accepted the validity of governance, instead it has often claimed that it has become the mechanism for the provision of public services and protection of the people, stating in the social contract that was formed after 2005, and has been the basis for the provision of security, stability, and stability of the country.
